

Sociology and Anthropology

Selected Student: Liz Munday

Submitted by: Patrick O'Brien

It was without hesitation when the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, in coordination with the Department of Psychology, nominated Liz Munday as a 2019-2020 Outstanding Student of the Year. In all of her courses Liz has not only demonstrated a high caliber of work, but also a passion for critical thinking. She contributes toward the learning of her classmates and is dedicated to her own intellectual development. She is consistently participatory in classroom discussions and displays a depth grasp of course material and knowledge of sociological issues rarely seen at the undergraduate level. Liz is intelligent, professional, motivated, and respectful to those around her and she certainly deserves this recognition from her professors, peers, and the SBCC community.

Liz's Words of Gratitude:

I wish to express my sincere appreciation and gratitude to the staff and faculty at Santa Barbara City College for their efforts and dedication to every student's dream of achieving a higher education. My time attending SBCC has been further enriched by the guidance and care of notable professors, who have continually offered me support and encouragement. Thank you to Dr. Janet Minehan, Dr. Patrick O'Brien, Dr. Sean Kelly, and Professor Anne Redding for your unwavering confidence in me.

My achievements could not have been possible without the love and support of my family, who share in both my hurdles and successes. The patience and understanding shown by my son and my partner, as I travel on this incredible journey, gives me inspiration to persevere and attain my goals. Thank you, Sebastian and AJ.
